

YES, PROTESTS ENDED THE WAR

I am writing in support of Matthew Johnson's letter (Letters 5/27) in praise of the article "50 Years Ago" (EW 5/13) and his taking to task the nonsensical conclusions of Christian Appy and "other historians."

Johnson's statement that "the antiwar movement didn't end the war, surging negative public opinion did" presents a distinction without a difference. It stands as an example of the type of Newspeak circular reasoning doubletalk against which we must always exert eternal vigilance, and I applaud Johnson for his exercise of the same.

ACTION, NOT PROTEST, ENDED THE VIETNAM WAR

"Yes, The Vietnam Protesters Ended The War" was the title of Matthew Johnson's letter last week (5/27). Johnson writes that the anti-war movement set out to change public opinion about the war effort and succeeded, thus putting an end to the war. "We did that," he proclaimed.

I was part of that effort in the '60s and early '70s in the S.F. Bay area and in L.A. The last big anti-war demo took place in L.A., fall of 1972, occasioned by a visit from former President Richard Nixon. A friend and I tried to exhort the crowd to move against Nixon, to no avail. A peace monitor, the actor Jon Voight (now a right-winger), confronted us, incredulous that anyone would be tired of passive, obey-the-rules demo etiquette.

She heck out of your house

The war went on for another three years past that last big protest. Public opinion? Not sure that has ever been key. Out of a dozen or so wars, only World War II had substantial public support.

The war ended because the Vietnamese won. U.S. troops started refusing to take the field. There were incidents of grenades being rolled into officers' tents.

I'm not saying that peace demos had no impact at all, just that they were not what ended the fighting. Well-behaved demos have never been decisive, probably never will. I learned something from years of boring anti-war demonstrations: the main thing being demonstrated, as I came to see it, was an endless overall refusal to take action. People kept dying as a result of that inaction.

ON KINDNESS?

What a gift we Eugeneans have in Ayisha Elliott ("Choose Kindness," Black Girl from Eugene EW5/20) with all her super powers. Elliott not only knows the motivation behind what we all think and do, she can even divine who the average "non racist white person" is and what they need to do. For mere mortals as myself such certainty would surely lead to a fall.

BREWING GREENWASH

Brewed up conservation? The concoction is greenwash.

It's not too late for Ninkasi and other local breweries to switch to organic grains and hops. In fact, it's a perfect time to put the soil back in the business ethic.

Consumers can play a big part in leveraging change. Ask for organic beer and also pledge to pay up to 50 percent more for future pleasures.

Until then, us farmers out amidst the valley agribusiness will continue to live with chemical fertilizers, herbicides, fungicides and pesticides; the real costs of nonorganic beer. It's hard to brew true conservation out of the ingredients being currently used.

THE U.S. CAN LEAD AGAIN

As a Borgen Project ambassador, I have recently become more aware of international issues regarding relations, politics and underdevelopment. Although these issues can be fairly difficult to understand, it's important for U.S. citizens to become educated on international issues and topics.

The main reason for this is because U.S. politicians have began to address the issues of terrorism, hunger, conflict and decunstruction; however, many politicans are focusing more on domestic issues rather than international issues, solely because a large majority of the population is unaware of the real conflicts that are going on in other countries, that are not covered in the media.

As a powerful first-world country, we have the power and the funding to fight against disputes in other countries. What we need to do now to address the issues with our congresspeople. This is a call to action. By calling and emailing your local congresspeople about international policies, the U.S. can help solve disputes and issues around the globe.

Dale Hart October 9th, 1952 – May 23rd, 2021

Dale Hart, 68, passed away at OHSU in Portland from complications of ALS. He died in the arms of his loving family.

FAMILY SPONSORED OBITUARY

Dale was born in Los Angeles to Ethel Mae Bonnell and Owen Hart. He grew up racing go-carts, riding motorcycles and playing baseball with his brother Roy. He learned to sing, play the guitar, banjo, mandolin and harmonica. In high school, he met Claudia Carol Hart (née Chambers), and they connected over their love of music and books. After high school they went to college and eventually married and had a daughter, Megan Marie Hart. Dale worked for many years as a metallurgical engineer.

In the early 90s, the family moved to Eugene, Oregon in order to get away from the big city, so he bought a farm. He used his engineering talents in his capacity as plant manager, and later co-owner of Genesis Juice. Although he and Claudia got divorced, they remained good friends and co-parents.

Everybody who knew Dale loved him: he liked making corny jokes and puns. If the Fauré Requiem came on the radio he would exclaim "Fauré's a jolly good fellow!" His life partner for the last 30 years, and god-mother to Megan, is Kathy Ann Rice. Dale loved tinkering on the farm, so Kathy called him her "King of the Farm." When she wanted to get horses, he told her he would rather have a motorcycle, so Kathy got a horse, and Dale got a midnight-blue Honda Magna. They loved sailing and kayaking together, a past-time they enjoyed until mid 2020, when he began to experience symptoms of ALS.

began to experience symptoms of ALS. He was a proud father: Dale loved coaching Megan for her softball team, taking her on father-daughter ski trips, driving her to countless piano, violin, voice, and ice skating lessons, and encouraging her in all her dreams. Every night until she left for college, he told her a "Mr. Mousie story." These epic sagas involved the complex lives of various stuffed animals, and the heroic bumbling antics of anti-hero Mr. Mousie; he never repeated a single story. Later, when she became an opera singer, he travelled all over the country and Europe to see her sing.

He leaves behind his daughter, Megan Marie Hart and his son-in-law Stefan Grieser, his life partner Kathy Ann Rice, his brother Roy Hart and his sister-in-law Laurie Hart, his niece Alison Freeman and her husband Jason Freeman, his nephew David Hart, his grand-nephew Gabriel Freeman, his grand-dogger Maggie Moo Hart, and his ex-wife Claudia Hart. His family is shattered by this loss. His dying wish was to donate his remains to ALS research to help advance science and find a cure. His noble donation will be shared by several ALS research centers in the USA, and will find a final resting place in an international brain bank for ALS scientists and researchers all over the world.

Donations may be made in his memory to the ALS Association.

Mega-Dairy

TOP CHEF, TILLAMOOK AND THE UNSAVORY LEGACY OF OREGON'S BIGGEST CHEESE FACTORY

illamook Creamery earned mega media hits when it announced it was reality TV show Top Chef's source of dairy products for the Portland season. The pairing makes sense. Both Tillamook and Top Chef have championed sustainable farm practices, ethical treatment of animals and reducing greenhouse gas emissions.

In 2019, Tillamook found itself at the center of a false advertising lawsuit because, contrary to the idvllic scenes of pastoral grazing indicated by its ad campaigns, most cows providing milk for the company are tightly packed residents of Oregon's biggest mega-dairy, Threemile Canyon Farms. And, like Tillamook, Threemile Canyon Farms has carefully crafted its own greenwashed image.

Threemile touts its glowing reviews from Validus, the mega-dairy's animal welfare auditor of choice. Validus is a for-profit company that charges the mega-dairies it audits, inviting questions that have gone unanswered around its motivations in handing out top marks to its clientele. According to an academic paper, Validus charges $1,795 per day for its Animal Welfare Reports-Dairy (AWR-D).

For all the cost, however, Validus does not address hormone or antibiotic use, nor does it require open pastures for cows. Cows in residence at Threemile Canyon lead their lives in confinement, entirely indoors, separated from their young, and impregnated continuously to produce more milk.

Threemile Canyon Farms also employs digesters, technology that processes manure to extract methane, a highly combustible, potent greenhouse gas that can be piped through fossil gas pipelines to California, contributing to that state's horrific record of gas leaks.

There's only one problem: Tillamook actually gets its milk from mega-dairy factory farms

Also left out of the narrative is the groundwater threatened by the lakes of manure produced by megadairies, including Threemile. And while Threemile's publicity material illustrates an image of land set aside specifically for conservation, those set-asides were the result of a settlement with conservation groups in 2000 after a lawsuit challenging Threemile's water rights and impact upon endangered species in the region - not of Threemile's environmental values.

Threemile Canyon Farms has not been the only mega-dairy supplying milk to Tillamook, however. Until 2018, Tillamook contracted with the now-infamous Lost Valley Farms, site of the proposed Easterday Dairy (which is also seeking to sell milk to Tillamook). Lost Valley Farms' owner, Greg Te Velde, was forced to shut down the mega-dairy after hundreds of environmental violations, sucking up millions of gallons of water a day in an area where residents are already struggling with drought and nitrate-heavy groundwater.

The disconnect between Tillamook's image as a model of sustainability and its transactions with mega-dairies has not been lost on Tillamook. In a 2017 email, Tillamook's legal representatives acknowledge the news coverage of Lost Valley Farms' environmental mismanagement doesn't look good. The email goes on to exhort Te Velde to "not disclose the existence of the Contract or the fact that you provide milk that relates to the production of Tillamook cheese," as "any association with our brand tarnishes our reputation."

Tillamook is connected so deeply with mega-dairies that any claims of sustainability on its part are inherently false. So when Top Chef trumpets its use of Tillamook products, it's actually supporting one of the dirtiest legacies in Oregon.

A Quiet Place for Water

FOR RESILIENCE AND SECOND WATER SOURCE, EWEB IS INVESTING MILLIONS OF DOLLARS FOR WATER STORAGE BUT SOME NEIGHBORS QUESTION THE MOVE

By Henry Houston

ead south on Hilyard Street, climb the steep hill, turn right on 40th Avenue and then left on Patterson Street. There's an empty lot with a meadow and a backdrop of oak trees and Douglas firs. This oak savannah is one of the few natural spaces in south Eugene without leaving the city limits.

The site is owned by Eugene Water and Electric Board and was purchased decades ago for the purpose of housing water storage units, which will provide the area with a more resilient water supply. Installing the water tanks at E. 40th Avenue is a part of EWEB's plan to replace outof-code water storage units.

But former EWEB Commissioner Sandra Bishop says the agency's shift in the number of water storage units there delays replacing reservoirs that could endanger neighborhoods and has a negative environmental impact at a time when every tree matters in combating climate change.

EWEB is spending $19.9 million to build two 7.5 million gallon water storage tanks there. EWEB initially planned to build one tank and return to install a second in 10 years, but changed course to provide more flexibility if there's a natural disaster, the agency says. EWEB — and Eugene's — only water source is the McKenzie River.

Using an accounting framework called a triple bottom line assessment, EWEB paid $30,000 for a consultant to draft locations for water tanks at E. 40th Avenue, spokesperson Joe Harwood says. Large projects like water tanks are funded through bonds, he adds

By installing two tanks now, EWEB is saving $1.4 million, according to EWEB's March 30 Record of Decision, but it's a change in what was initially presented to the public last year. Construction of the tanks could take up to three years, which means missing the 2023 deadline to decommission the out-of-code water reservoir at College Hill, according to EWEB.

If EWEB had continued with installing one tank now and a second in 10 years, it would have cost $21.3 million and a total of four years over a 10-year period, Harwood says. So the neighborhood only has to have a disturbance over one time span and reduces truck trips on Patterson and Hilyard streets. "This is the right thing to do environmentally, socially and economically," he adds.

'IF THE [WATER] TREATMENT PLANT GOES DOWN, WE ONLY HAVE THESE BASE LEVEL RESERVOIRS TO COUNT ON FOR STORAGE FOR THE ENTIRE COMMUNITY.' — Laura Farthing, EWEB project engineer

With one 7.5 million gallon at E. 40th without the College Hill reservoir, residents living above an elevation of 500 feet wouldn't have water access, Farthing says. "If the [water] treatment plant goes down, we only have these base level reservoirs to count on for storage for the entire community."

And if EWEB only built one 7.5 million gallon reservoir and then took down the 15 million gallon College Hill reservoir, she says, EWEB would be down several million gallons of water if an emergency occurred. When the Holiday Farm Fire hit, EWEB would have relied on the water storage tanks if something happened to the McKenzie River.

With concerns of a Cascadia quake, future wildfires affecting supply and future water resilience, Farthing says building a total of six new tanks, including two smaller

'WE HAVE LESS THAN 10 YEARS TO DEAL WITH THE CLIMATE CRISIS AND EWEB HAS NO REGARD FOR SAVING 100- 150-YEAR OLD TREES.' — Sandra Bishop, former EWEB commissioner

Bishop says she's not opposed to locating a water storage tank at the E. 40th Avenue site, but she's concerned about the condition of the two older water storage tanks at College Hill and Hawkins Hill.

The two older 15 million gallon reservoirs have leaks and structural deficiencies, Laura Farthing, project engineer says. "We have to remedy those by 2023," she adds.

Citing past EWEB meeting materials, Bishop says if a large earthquake occurs (such as the Cascadia earthquake), those reservoirs will fail, resulting in a flood at those nearby neighborhoods. "The EWEB commissioners are playing with people's lives," she says. "They're not dealing with a failed infrastructure. The College Hill Reservoir is dangerous."

Farthing says EWEB has been working on updating reservoirs since 2015 as part of its water system master plan, which intends to strengthen the agency's water resiliency. reservoirs at E. 40th Avenue, College Hill and Hawkins Hill, will provide some flexibility. With two tanks at each site, one can be emptied, making maintenance easier, she adds.

At the April 6 meeting where EWEB commissioners unanimously approved the decision to build two water tanks at E. 40th Avenue, EWEB's Water Operations Manager Karen Kelley said she worked with OHA for 15 years. If EWEB didn't meet the decommission date for the College Hill Reservoir, the state agency would ask for a new action plan for taking College Hill offline.

OHA spokesperson Jonathan Modie tells Eugene Weekly that if EWEB doesn't have the College Hill Reservoir offline by 2023, OHA Drinking Water Services could pursue formal enforcement, which could lead to civil penalties. But if EWEB is making progress toward correcting the deficiency, OHA would probably agree to adjusting the deadline for the reservoir to go offline, he adds.

According to EWEB, the project starts August 2021 with tree removal, which will result in a loss of 25 percent of the trees at the site, including 77 oak trees and 265 other trees, mostly Douglas firs. But Farthing says the project will preserve most of the oak trees, which is a more climate resilient tree species. "We're looking to make the whole site more resilient," she adds.

The number of trees that have to be cut to make room for the two tanks is a concern for Bishop. EWEB has completed an environmental assessment report for the project, but she says she's been calling for a carbon assessment to gauge how much carbon is stored in the trees that are being cut and the amount released when completing construction.

"We have less than 10 years to deal with the climate crisis and EWEB has no regard for saving 100-150-year old trees," Bishop says.

The agency says in the March 30 Record of Decision that it's aware of the lost carbon sequestration from the removal. Farthing says EWEB will leave downed trees on site and will thin forested areas to encourage growth in trees that had been shaded by Douglas firs, and EWEB is working with the city of Eugene to relocate some downed trees to a wetland restoration site.

EWEB Commissioner John Barofsky said at the public meeting that if the two tank storage option had been announced last year when EWEB was starting the public process, response would have been different.

But EWEB General Manager Frank Lawson said at the meeting he's taking responsibility for the change in plans. He said he proposed the current two tank project to the board in January, adding that in retrospect he could have communicated with the public better in regards to the switch.

As for the future of the natural space that many south Eugene residents have used as a space to walk, Harwood says he sees the oak savannah being the central part of the public space. "Less of a park and more of a public, open space," he adds. ■

Davie Scott Hanes 1965-2021

WHILE LIVING ON THE STREETS, HANES TOOK OTHERS UNDER HIS WING

By Taylor Perse

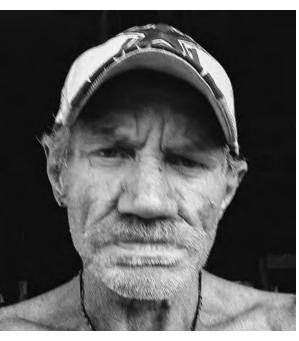

avie Scott Hanes, known to many as Scotty, loved the Dallas Cowboys, pizza and his German shepherd, Holly. Those who knew him describe him as loving and selfless, giving to others even when he couldn't take care of himself. Hanes died in Springfield on Feb. 1, 2021 at the age of 55. The baby of his family, Hanes is survived by a sister, Jackie Nielson Gutierrez, and a brother, Paul Mattson, Hanes is preceded in death by his mother, who he loved and missed very much.

"He was a very kind, old soul," says Destiney Christianson-Port, an old friend of Hanes who says that he was like a father to her.

Born in Salt Lake City, Utah, Hanes came to Eugene more than 15 years ago to get some room from his family. He lived unhoused in Salt Lake City and in Eugene. In the year prior to his death, Hanes lived in a supportive housing apartment sponsored by ShelterCare. Christianson-Port says for most of Hanes' life, he battled chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD), which made everyday living difficult for him.

Hanes met Christianson-Port around 10 years ago, when they both lived at the skatepark at Washington-Jefferson Park. She says when they first met, he was grumpy and shy. They then became close because Hanes' dog was named Holly and Christianson-Port had a daughter named Holly. Hane's dog was later adopted out through Greenhill Humane Society.

Hanes really liked pizza, Christianson-Port says. Every month, when he received his social security check, they would get Domino's Pizza and eat it on the porch of the Oregon Country Fair office.

> SEDONA PRINCE

Like many others who have lived on the streets, Hanes struggled with addiction, but was eventually able to secure housing. Christianson-Port says Hanes' Shelter-Care apartment was decorated with memorabilia from the Dallas Cowboys including jerseys and posters. He was lonely in his apartment, but happy to be housed.

"He had no help really," Christianson-Port says.

When Hanes and Christianson-Port hung out, they spent their time joking around with one another. Hanes talked and dreamed about fishing and traveling but never got the chance because he got really sick, she says. Christianson-Port and her boyfriend visited his apartment regularly.

The official cause of death was an overdose on methamphetamine. Christianson-Port says, because according to the reports, the county found the paraphernalia in his apartment. She adds that there was no autopsy and he was cremated before his family was notified of the death, and she thinks maybe the COPD contributed. The state Medical Examiner Division did not provide information on his cause of death as of press time.

Christianson-Port says Hanes specifically requested to have "Fuck yeah, Scotty" be put in his obituary, because "everytime we'd see him we'd say that," she says. She believes Hanes knew that his time was coming, and wanted to get to his mother and see her again. "He was a great man," she says. "We miss him." ■

• Good news from Salem. The Oregon Senate passed a bill that makes June 19 — Juneteenth — a state holiday. The Senate passed the bill unanimously June 1 (with Republican Sens. Kim Thatcher and Dallas Heard excused). It passed the House back in April and is now headed to Gov. Kate Brown's desk. Juneteenth, for those who aren't familiar, commemorates when enslaved people in Galveston, Texas, were told they were freed, two years after the Emancipation Proclamation. Oregon's first-ever state-recognized Juneteenth holiday will be in 2022 since the bill doesn't go into effect right away, but it's still good progress as we continue to grapple with the state's and nation's history with the Black community.

SHIFTING SAND CASTLES

SUMMER EVENTS IN LANE COUNTY WILL BE A DIZZYING RIDE OF COVID PROTOCOLS AND CATEGORIES // BY DAN BUCKWALTER

urning page after page of Eugene Weekly's last Summer Guide issue is a remarkable journey of how diverse the entertainment tastes were in Lane County.

There were races and running events, fairs and festivals, outdoor art gatherings, rodeos, indoor and outdoor theater, camps for almost anything kids are interested in, as well as Eugene Emeralds baseball games.

And there was music. Oh, there was music of all stripes. Garth Brooks at Autzen Stadium. Cuthbert Amphitheater with a full slate. The Shedd had its production of Damn Yankees. There was the Oregon Bach Festival. Sam Bond's, Sessions and other venues were running at full speed.

The year was 2019 B.C. (before COVID), and it was amazing.

2020 was a virus-driven hell, and that was the first time in anyone's memory EW didn't have a Summer Guide issue. But as COVID is slowly letting up we are trying again with the 2021 Summer Guide, complete with listings, stories and pictures to whet the appetite for entertainment during the long days and short nights of summer.

None of it, of course, is etched in stone. Think of it as a shifting sand castle.

The deck chairs of scheduling, already in disarray this spring when Lane County was moved to high risk and then extreme risk categories, continues into the summer. This spring alone, two Lane County summer institutions — the Oregon Country Fair and OBF — bowed to the months-long logistical challenges of planning and decided to go virtual.

Those same logistical challenges — how to spread everyone out in a pandemic — exist for other high-volume events scheduled to take place, notably the Lane County Fair (July 21-25), the Junction City Scandinavian Festival (Aug. 12-15), the Butte to Butte road race (Aug. 22) and Art and the Vineyard (Sept. 10-12).

The Maude Kerns Art Center, which runs Art and the Vineyard, and organizers for the Butte to Butte run made the pre-emptive move away from their annual July 4 holiday events to what they hope to be more forgiving dates later this summer.

Will restrictions continue to ease and see Lane County at low or moderate risk on those dates, or any scheduled date?

The calendar is relentless, as is the roller-coaster nature of our going from one risk category to another. The organizers for the U.S. Olympic Track and Field Trials (June 18-27) have discovered this, too.

The new Hayward Field, with its grand phallus on Agate Street, opened in 2020 and it has hosted meets in front of a smattering of spectators. Trials organizers had already refunded tickets with no assurance that ticket holders will be able to repurchase tickets under a new, very limited seating plan, but that changed over Memorial Day weekend with the announcement of vaccinated and unvaccinated seating sections.

That new seating plan, an expanded version of "pod seating," could be the rule for venues ranging from Cuthbert to WildCraft Cider Works to the Hult Center and its 10x10 series. If, of course, they happen.

Everything is up in the air.

With a growing number of vaccinations, summer 2021 might be a touch better than summer 2020, but the situation is fluid. There may be some down times, and like everyone, event organizers and patrons will be paying strict attention to COVID numbers the same way anyone else paid attention to weather reports pre-COVID.

Still, after a year's hiatus, EW's Summer Guide issue is back. Just remember, none of it is etched in stone. Think of it as a castle of shifting sand. ■

MOVING ON TO OTHER PLATFORMS

LAWRENCE BROWNLEE IS AMONG THE HEADLINERS AT THIS YEAR'S VIRTUAL OBF // BY DAN BUCKWALTER

or some, the COVID pandemic has been a frustrating period of idling, and this is especially so for musicians in the arts.

Not so for Lawrence Brownlee.

The 49-year-old Florida-based tenor — long regarded as an international star in bel canto opera repertory, or opera from the early 19th century — has been front and center with classical music's shift toward digital programming in the last year as well as a voice for activism for racial justice generally and diversity in the industry.

Brownlee is one of the central performers in the 2021 Virtual Oregon Bach Festival ("Music is Everywhere"), which starts its three-week run on June 25. His performance of bel canto arias, spirituals and American song with pianist Myra Huang kicks off on July 5.

Brownlee has been hailed by critics as "an international star in the bel canto operatic repertory" (The New York Times) and "one of the world's bel canto stars" (The Guardian). He has been in demand the past several years and performed throughout the world in opera performances and recitals.

This past year, as opera houses closed because of the pandemic, Brownlee simply moved on to other platforms.

In May 2020, he launched "The Sitdown With LB," a weekly Facebook Live series in which he explores being an African American opera singer. This series has featured conversations with renowned artists such as Geoerge Shirley, Denyce Graves, Martina Arroyo and others.

Shortly before that, Brownlee began hosting "Coffee and a Song," a video series in which he invites artist friends to perform interpretations of art songs from their own homes, and he has given an online master class conversation-performance as part of National Sawdust's Digital Discovery Festival.

Brownlee is comfortable in the virtual setting, so sit back and enjoy the performance. It should be a treat for opera lovers.

The 2021 Virtual Oregon Bach Festival — Music is Everywhere — is June 25 through July 11. Bel Canto with Lawrence Brownlee runs from July 5 through July 11. OBF's stream can be found at OregonBachFestival.org.

HIKING LANE COUNTY IN ZØZ1, REMEMBERING ZØZ0

THERE IS MUCH TO EXPLORE AS FORESTS RECOVER FROM THE WILDFIRES OF A YEAR AGO // BY CHANDRA LEGUE

ire-burned forest landscapes are not the first hiking destinations that jump to mind for many people. Forest fires tend to elicit feelings of pain and loss, especially after a year like 2020 when so many hit so close to home here in western Oregon on top of COVID-19. It can be hard to visualize some of our favorite places, like the Delta Old Growth Grove or Opal Creek, ever being the same.

But, believe it or not, all the forested trails, campgrounds and riversides you know as lush, mossy sanctuaries have burned at one time or another in the past.

Forests recovering naturally from burns are some of the most interesting and beautiful to visit. Some signs of past fires are quite subtle.

For example, along the popular Brice and Goodman creek trails, you might see that one side of massive 5-foot diameter Douglas-fir trees are blackened to 20 feet off the ground — remnants from a past fire that these fire-adapted trees survived.

Other fire effects are more noticeable along the trails.

A few favorites where you can see natural fire recovery at work — including fire-burned snags, wildflowers and thriving young trees include:

Bunchgrass Ridge Trail: Thirty years after the Warner Creek fire, this trail east of Oakridge showcases summer wildflowers, great views as well as a beautiful mix of live and dead old-growth trees.

North Waldo Shoreline Trail: High elevation and a hot fire in 1996 left a huge scar on the north side of Waldo Lake. Today, fire recovery is evident, views are gorgeous and plant life is thriving.

Middle Fork Willamette Trail at Chuckle Springs: The Tumblebug Fire of 2009 changed the lush forest along this stretch of the Middle Fork Willamette Trail, but left behind a huge variety of fire impacts from low to severe to explore. ■

THE SHOW (FINALLY) GOES ON

fter a year of dark, empty stages, local theaters have at last begun to open again with live shows on the books as we continue to practice social distancing.

John G. Shedd Institute for the Arts has rescheduled its theater performances that were canceled last year to this fall. A production of The Pajama Games is scheduled for Sept. 17 to 26, and just in time for the holiday spirit, Holiday Inn will run from Dec. 3 to 19. The Shedd is presenting Be-Bop-A-Lula to revive and remaster some of the iconic songs from the 1950s; the show will run June 11 to 13.

Jim Ralph, executive director at The Shedd, says, "In our industry, we really need to be looking in terms of months. We need the stability we had; it just takes time to put these things together."

Eugene's Very Little Theatre is currently closed for in-person performances but is doing virtual performances while moving ahead with construction on its building. "I think over the next six months we are going to see a bunch of solo shows or small numbers of two to three people because the idea is that limiting their exposure is allowing these people to bubble together,"says Jessica Ruth Baker, development and marketing coordinator at VLT. But she says while she thinks the status quo will return, "a lot of people were introduced to virtual theater, and I do not think that it is going to go away."

Cottage Theatre in Cottage Grove has also been closed and hopes to reopen for the fall season. Currently, the musical Breathe has tickets available for purchase to watch the production online. Their stage is also undergoing a remodel in preparation for a fresh reopening.

Last but not least, Oregon Contemporary Theatre has a show called Art, set to run in-person and streaming from June 4 to 12. Tickets can only be purchased in sets of two or four, and distancing mandates must be followed while in attendance; more information can be found at OCTheatre.org/reopening.

AQUATIC RECREATION IS PERFECT FOR COVID SOCIAL DISTANCING BY TAYLOR PERSE

ane County's warm summers and access to lakes are the perfect combination for trying out new modes of aquatic recreation. Whether you want to try a standup paddle board (my personal favorite, as I bought an inflatable one this year and love it), a kayak or a canoe, this summer is the perfect time to take COVID social distancing to the water.

I've learned that gliding across a lake surrounded by trees with the warm sun on your face is a great escape. So if you are investing in a non-motorized boating/paddling here are some of my favorite local places to go:

Near the coast, Cleawox Lake at Jessie M. Honeyman Memorial State Park is an oasis. The sand dunes that surround the lake block out the brisk sea winds, leaving you with some good sunshine. The water is usually pretty still, providing you with a beach-like experience without being in the ocean. Plus, it's maybe a 10 minute drive from Florence.

On the east side of the county, alpine lakes offer a different experience. Though the water is cold, it is also still and clear. Plus, you get breathtaking views of all your favorite Cascade peaks. In this area, I recommend Sparks Lake and Waldo Lake, which are easy day trips from central Lane County.

But if you want to stay local to the Eugene-Springfield area, that's OK, too. Both Dexter Lake off Highway 58, and Dorena Lake in Cottage Grove are great for paddling and the reservoirs are only a 30-minute drive away. The only downside is there are a lot of boats on the water. If you want to escape some crowds, Fall Creek Reservoir is an option, although it's slightly farther.

Wherever you decide to paddle or row, just remember to wear a life vest. Check out Oregon. Gov/OSMB to learn more about requirements and permits. ■ issing with a and Co again.

issing the joys of safety pinning a race bib to your shirt and running with a pack of other humans? Well, with more people getting vaccinated and COVID-19 infection rates declining, you can run with your friends again

The old proverb, "If you want to run fast, go alone. If you want to run far, go together," isn't totally correct. Before the pandemic shut everything down, I was attending Run Hub Eugene's community runs. And by trying to keep up with the faster runners, I was logging some of my fastest paces. Luckily, the local running store's community runs have returned, giving an opportunity for those who want to run fast, to run fast together. But participating in community runs doesn't mean you have to run your fastest. The events attract runners and walkers of all ages and paces. Because of social distancing, runners meet at the grassy area adjacent to the Campbell Community Center, which is located at 155 High Street. Run Hub's community runs are 6 pm every Wednesday and are free. Visit RunHubNW.com for updates.

If you're looking for events that combine race environment and socializing, head over to Oregon Track Club's 2021 Run/Walk series. The event attracts a variety of runners, volunteer Celeste Kuta says, from Olympic runners to people in their 80s to joggulars (jogging jugglers). Eclectic Edge Racing times the runners and walkers, and the events vary in distances: 5 km (3.1 miles) and 10 km (6.21 miles). Regardless of your running ability, Kuta says the events have a positive atmosphere. "Everybody is supporting everybody," she adds. "It's very supportive and inclusive." And Oregon Track Club races are returning, too. While the U.S. Olympic Trials are happening at the new Hayward Field, OTC is hosting the Pre's Trail Revival 7 pm, Wednesday, June 23. And the Aquafina Butte to Butte has moved from July 4 to Aug. 22.

The Run/Walk series events are 6 pm on the second Thursday of every month through October. Visit OregonTrackClub.org for up-to-date information on event locations and times; events are free for members and $5 for nonmembers.

It's been a hard year away for everyone with the pandemic restrictions. For the Oregon Children's Choir, it has meant Zoom rehearsals in the winter and no performances. "That's astonishing," says Chris Dobson, artistic director of the Eugene-based OCC, which was established in 1990 and also suffered through hard times during the 2008 recession. "We came back strong," Dobson says, but the pandemic, he adds, "was a completely different experience for us." Now it's time for the OCC and two of its seven $choirs-the\,26\text{-}strong\,Young\,Men's\,Ensemble\,and\,Boy$ Choir as well as Counterpoint, the ll-member changevoice acapella ensemble - to flex their voices in front of an audience. The singers finally found enough good weather and some outdoor space for rehearsals at the First Congregational Church in south Eugene. The YME has singers ranging from 6th grade to first year of college, and Counterpoint's age range is from 9th grade to first year of college. Their performances at The Broadway Streatery will be, Dobson says, laid back, but it certainly is good to have them back.

The Oregon Children's Choir's Young Men's Ensemble and Counterpoint will perform at the Broadway Streatery between High and Willamette streets from 6 to 8 pm Saturday, June 5. More information about OCC and its seven choirs can be found at OregonChildrensChoir.org. – Dan Buckwalter

Color Coding

PROMISING NEW POST-PROG TRIO FROM EUGENE RELEASES MUSIC VIDEO ON YOUTUBE, PREPS FOR LIVE SHOWS

By Will Kennedy

ugene musician Derek Sibert identifies as synesthetic, meaning that when he hears music, he sees colors. He sings, plays bass and is the primary songwriter in a new Eugene post-prog and indie-rock trio called [glazier], and when it came time to think of a video for his band's first single "down.up.down," yellow was the first color he thought of. The song is taken from the band's debut EP, which is expected digitally sometime this summer.

Sibert developed the video idea with his bandmates: Andrew Srack from the popular Eugene band Muscle Beach Petting Zoo on guitar, and Grayson Andrews on drums, a longtime local musician for whom [glazier] is his most high-profile project.

Directing the project was Jordan Blaisdell, a skilled amateur filmmaker and musician with The Critical Shakes. The video is out now on YouTube.

In the carefully orchestrated song, Srack's guitar lines intertwine in ways both mathematical and beautiful. And over a propulsive backbeat consisting of Sibert's searching bassline, Sibert and Andrews platoon rhythmically behind Sibert's melodic singing, stopping and starting in ways both aggressive — like metal or hardcore punk, perhaps — but also precise, like Rush.

Run "down.up.down" through the comparison machine and you will receive many hits. To all of them, though, the song calls for the post-prefix: post-punk, post-prog, post-math rock, but with song structure too traditional to be considered post-rock.

In a time without live shows, the music video is [glazier]'s introduction to the world. The loose narrative concept involves "hacking into" several natural biomes, represented by various locations on the Oregon coast. There's the band carrying a triangle shape, using second-hand computer keyboards painted yellow and wearing Star Trek-style "scanner" sunglasses.

"It's post-apocalyptic," Sibert told me over the phone. "We just kept building."

Post-apocalyptic: A mood which suits, after all, the year we've lived through. Our already tech-obsessed lifestyles made more so by the pandemic, stuck indoors doom-scrolling as if our lives depended on it, because in many ways, they do.

Sibert played with the now-defunct Portland and Eugene-based instrumental post-rock band called Childspeak, and he carries much of that sensibility into [glazier].

He left Childspeak in 2019 and needed a new songwriting project to occupy his time. Shortly before the pandemic hit, he brought the songs to Srack and Andrews, and without the pressure of playing live shows, they decided to record the EP in Andrews' tricked-out drummer's garage. The band worked up about a dozen pieces, whittling them down to just five songs. This no deadline approach was a relief for Sibert.

"If we have all this time," he thought, "let's get these songs really, really solid. I don't have to impress somebody right now," he says.

When writing music, Sibert prioritizes songwriting over technical prowess, "but I don't see them as separate," he says. He almost always starts with the music instead of words. When it comes time to add lyrics, he begins with a concept rather than a narrative, such as the pandemic, or a desire to have children of his own, he says.

"I love music that does seem to have things connecting," Sibert explains, "and the words come naturally from there."

In the studio, the band first recorded live to an old fashioned metronome-like click track, commonly used to help musicians keep time early on in the recording process, and then overdubbed the bass, guitar and vocals. They also utilized a lot of room mics, blending them all together in the final mix. Sibert says, "Honestly, for a three-piece band, this is the fullest record I've ever been a part of."

At the end of the video for "down.up.down" [glazier] is seen playing its actual instruments in an abandoned saw mill, discovered by Sibert on the Oregon coast, a refreshing release of analog human interaction against a digital backdrop. All the while, the natural world remains both virally menacing and our only real avenue for escape.

The music video for "down.up.down" from [glazier] is available now on YouTube. The band's debut EP is expected sometime this summer, with live shows coming in the fall, COVID permitting. The second single from the EP, "club silencio," is out June II on streaming platforms, with a new music video on Youtube. For more information search "glazier music" on social media.

Down the Drain, Up with Art

SPRINGFIELD SEEKS ARTISTS TO HELP DELIVER ENVIRONMENTAL MESSAGE WITH UPSTREAM ART PROJECT

By Ester Barkai

don't normally think of storm drains unless there's a flood on my street and then it's, like, isn't there a storm drain around here? But it is Environmental Specialist Peter Jaeger's job to think about storm water and drains all year round. He has been working for the city of Springfield's Stormwater Team for five years. He began in June 2016, and Springfield's UpStream Art project was created in August of that same year.

The purpose of the Upstream Art project, in which artists are commissioned to paint inspirational murals around storm drains and sidewalks, is to educate or remind people about the function of storm drains. In Springfield they deliver the overflow of storm water to the Middle Fork Willamette and the McKenzie rivers.

We have separate systems for sewer and storm drainage, Jaeger explains. The benefit of having those systems separate is that we don't have potential sewage coming out on our roads. On the other hand, we don't have treatment for the water that's going into our natural water resources. That means cigarette butts, automobile fluids and other pollutants can wind up in our rivers.

"As soon as anything hits the pavement," says Jaeger, it goes straight through, untreated.

He comes from an artistic family, and he used to be a cordwainer $-\,a\,shoe\,designer.$ He enjoys being around creative people and, in fact, preps the mural sites for the artists before they set to work. He is excited to see art made in appreciation for what he calls a "hugely vital piece of infrastructure."

This year, barring any unforeseen circumstances such as wildfires (that's what happened last year), the mural painting event will take place on Sept. 2 and 3. For now it's scheduled as a closed event due to COVID concerns, but that can change. Because it was closed last year, the city created a virtual tour of the 26 storm drain art murals. That tour can be accessed at the city of Springfield UpStream Art website, as can the submission to apply.

Artists selected will be compensated $1,000 each and the deadline is June 9. You don't need a long resume or, really, any resume. All ages are welcome. The project hopes to receive submissions from middle grade students in particular this year since the storm drain sites to be painted are around Agnes Stewart Middle School.

Criteria for selection are based on how well an artist's idea corresponds with this year's theme, "Keep it Clean, Drains to Stream," and whether the mural can likely be finished within the scheduled two-day time frame.

For more information about UpStream Art, see Springfield-or.gov.

WIGGLY TAILS DOG RESCUE

approx. 5 years old, 90 lbs. Jill is a delightfully sweet girl who's favorite pastimes are snuggles and sleeping on the couch. She loves to go for walks and has good leash manners. Jill's pups have all been adopted, and now she is ready to meet her forever family. She has become a little more playful with other dogs in her foster home, even enjoying toys, too. Jill coexists well with other dogs in the home, after slow and supervised introductions. She seems to love and be curious about kiddos and may be a good fit as a family dog (though she will need a job, as her breed is meant to be a guardian). Jill is a large breed dog and WLL sit on you. When she's excited, she will paw at her people. A fine alert dog, she will let you know when something seems "off" around the home. When not observing her surroundings, she will gladly join her human(s) for an afternoon nap in the hammock if you're not paying attention. Jill is adored by her foster family and they can't express enough how fortunate her future family will be to take her home.

(MARCH 21-APRIL 19): "There is ecstasy in paying attention," writes Aries author Anne Lamott. That's always true for everyone, but it's extra true for you Aries people. And it will be extra ultra especially true for you during the next 20 days. I hope you will dedicate yourself to celebrating and upgrading your perceptual abilities. I hope you will resolve to see and register everything just as it is in the present moment, fresh and unprecedented, not as it was in the past or will be in the future. For best results, banish all preconceptions that might interfere with your ability to notice what's raw and real. If you practice these high arts with exhilarating diligence, you will be rewarded with influxes of ecstasy.

TAURUS (APRIL 20-MAY 20): Your guiding wisdom comes from Taurus author Annie Dillard. She writes, "I think it would be well, and proper, and obedient, and pure, to grasp your one necessity and not let it go, to dangle from it limp wherever it takes you." I suspect that Dillard's approach will enable you to maintain a righteous rhythm and make all the right moves during the coming weeks. If you agree with me, your crucial first step will be to identify the nature of your "one necessity." Not two necessities. Just the single most important.

GEMINI (MAY 21-JUNE 20): "All I want to be is normally insane," said actor Marlon Brando. Yikes! I have a different perspective. I would never want to be normally insane because that state often tends to be sullen and desperate and miserable. My preferred goal is to be quite abnormally insane: exuberantly, robustly, creatively free of the toxic adjustments that our society tells us are necessary. I want to be cheerfully insane in the sense of not being tyrannized by conventional wisdom. I want to be proactively insane in the sense of obeying my souls' impulses rather than conforming to people's expectations. I bring this to your attention, Gemini, because I believe the coming weeks will be a fruitful time for you to be my kind of insane.

CANCER (JUNE 21-JULY 22): "It's one thing to make a mistake, it's another to become wedded to it," advised author Irena Karafilly. Let's make that one of your key truths in the coming weeks. Now is a good time to offer yourself forgiveness and to move on from any wrong turns you've made. Here's a second key truth, courtesy of composer Igor Stravinsky: "I have learned throughout my life as a composer chiefly through my mistakes and pursuits of false assumptions, not by my exposure to founts of wisdom and knowledge." Third key truth, from Sufi teacher Pir Vilayat Inayat Khan: "Don't be concerned about being disloyal to your pain by being joyous.

LEO (JULY 23-AUG. 22): According to my analysis of the astrological omens, the number of perfect moments you will experience during the next two weeks could break all your previous records. And what do I mean by "perfect moments"? 1. Times when life brings you interesting events or feelings or thoughts that are novel and unique. 2. Pivotal points when you sense yourself undergoing a fundamental shift in attitude or a new way of understanding the world. 3. Leaping out of your own mind and into the mind of an animal or other person so as to have a pure vision of what their experience is like. 4. An absolute appreciation for yourself just the way you are right now.

VIRGO (AUG. 23-SEPT. 22): "There is strong shadow where there is much light," wrote Virgo author Johann Wolfgang von Goethe (1749–1832). That's a good metaphor for you these days. Since I suspect you are currently shining as brightly as you possibly can, I will urge you to become acutely aware of the shadows you cast. In other words, try to catch glimpses of the unripe and unformed parts of your nature, which may be more easily seen than usual. Now, while you're relatively strong and vibrant, investigate what aspects of your inner world might need improvement, care and healing.

LIBRA (SEPT. 23-OCT. 22): According to physicists, it's impossible for a human being to suck water up through a straw that's more than 34 feet long. So please don't even try to do that, either now or ever. If, however, you have a good reason to attempt to suck water up a 33-foot straw, now would be an excellent time to do so. Your physical strength should be at a peak, as is your capacity for succeeding at amazing, herculean tasks. How else might you direct your splendid abilities? What other ambitious feats could you pull off?

SCORPIO (OCT. 23-NOV. 21): Scorpio poet Ezra Pound had character flaws that bother me. But he also had a quality I admire: generosity in helping his friends and colleagues. Among the writers whose work he championed and promoted with gusto were 20th-century literary icons James Joyce, T. S. Eliot, Marianne Moore, Hilda Doolittle, William Butler Yeats, Ernest Hemingway, William Carlos Williams and Robert Frost. Pound edited their work, arranged to get them published in periodicals and anthologies, connected them with patrons and editors, and even gave them money and clothes. In accordance with astrological omens, I encourage you to be like Ezra Pound in the coming weeks. Make an extra effort to support and boost your allies. Assist them in doing what they do well. To do so will be in your own best interest!

SAGITTARIUS (NOV. 22-DEC. 21): Poet Tess Gallagher praises those times "when desire has strengthened our bodies." I want you to have an abundance of those moments during the coming weeks. And I expect that cultivating them will be an excellent healing strategy. So here's my advice: Do whatever's necessary to summon and celebrate the strong longings that will strengthen your body. Tease them into a bountiful presence. Treasure them and pay reverence to them and wield them with gleeful passion.

CAPRICORN (DEC. 22-JAN. 19): "To live is so startling it leaves little time for anything else," observed poet Emil Dickinson. That's the truth! Given how demanding it is to adjust to the nonstop challenges, distractions and opportunities of the daily rhythm, I'm impressed that any of us ever get any work done. According to my astrological analysis, you Capricorns are now ex periencing a big outbreak of this phenomenon. It's probably even harder than usual to get work done, simply because life keeps bringing you interesting surprises that require your ingenuity and resourcefulness. The good news is that these surges of ingenuity and resourcefulness will serve you very well when the hubbub settles down a bit and you get back to doing more work.

AQUARIUS (JAN. 20-FEB. 18): Aquarius-born August Strindberg (1849–1912) was a masterful and influential playwright. He also liked to dabble in painting and photography. His approach in those two fields was different from the polish he cultivated in his writing. "I am an amateur and I intend to stay that way," he testified about his approach in the visual arts. "I reject all forms of professional cleverness or virtuosity." Just for now, Aquarius, I recommend you experiment with the latter attitude in your own field. Your skill and earnestness will benefit from doses of playful innocence, even calculated naiveté

PISCES (FEB. 19-MARCH 20): Which of the astrological signs feels the deepest feelings? I say it's you Pisceans. You're connoisseurs of deep feelings, as well as specialists in mysterious, multi-splendored, brushes-with-infinity feelings. And right now, you're in the Deepest Feelings Phase of your personal cycle. I won't be surprised if you feel a bit overwhelmed with the richness of it all. But that's mostly a good thing that you should be grateful for — a privilege and a super-power! Now here's advice from deep-feeling author Pearl Buck: "You cannot make yourself feel something you do not feel, but you can make yourself do right in spite of your feelings."

Quickies BY DAN SAVAGE

ke a year ago. The woman I was dating at the time stepped away. I have no hard feelings, but I long for intimacy again. I am profoundly grateful that I don't have any major outward injuries from the stroke, but my stamina is still very low and might always be. That makes me self-conscious and insecure about sex. Would it be over-sharing" if I told someone about my stroke before we go to bed for the first time? It seems like it will kill the mood and almost certainly make things less fun. Am I obligated to share this information?

- Outwardly Okay Privately Struggling

You're not obligated to share this kind of health information before going to bed with someone for the first time, OOPS, but you might wanna share it. At the root of your worries about post-stroke stamina is a fear of falling short of a new partner's expectations — expectations shaped by assumptions a new partner might have about your stamina based on your overall appearance of good health. Resetting your partner's expectations will take the pressure off — indeed, if you tell a new partner you recently had a stroke, OOPS, you'll most likely exceed her (reset) expectations. And that could give your sexual self-confidence a welcome boost.

I'm a recently separated 42-year-old straight male. I'm internet dating for the first time, and I met an awesome girl who makes me laugh, makes me playlists on Spotify, and is just generally amazing. Of course there's a glitch: I'm not attracted to her. I tried but I think the romantic relationship needs to end. She has mentioned several times in the last couple of months that I treat her better than anybody she's ever dated. (That blows my mind — apparently cooking dinner, occasional flowers and returning texts puts me head and shoulders above everyone else?) My question: How do you break that kind of news to someone without looking like an asshole?

Speaking of expectations...

You're a newly separated man and you've only been seeing this woman for a couple of months. If her expectations were reasonable and she kept them in check, AHOLE, then she knows the odds were stacked against something long-term. She'll still be sad about the relationship ending, and she might think you're an asshole for ending it — she might actually need to think you're an asshole to cauterize the emotional wound (so don't argue with her if she calls you an asshole) — but if you didn't make any premature declarations of undying love, AHOLE, then she's unlikely to think you're an asshole forever. And looking on the bright side: she may be less likely to put up with guys who don't cook, don't come through with flowers and don't respond to her texts in a reasonable amount of time after being with you.

My friend's grandmother was walking through a park when she was accosted by a man asking for sex. (Yes, my friend's grandmother.) The man wasn't violent. It was more of a plea for physical affection, but definitely one that was made in a rapey way. He had something in his hand but it wasn't a weapon: it was a negative COVID-19 test. He showed it to her as if to say, "It's OK! I'm not a real threat!" Is this what we've come to as a society? Is the isolation people have suffered over the last year going to result in the rate of sexual assault going up?

— Pandemic's Awful Reality Keeps Scaring

— Anxiously Hesitating Over Looming End

The combination of our politics and this pandemic seems to have broken some people, PARKS, and brought out the barely suppressed and absolute worst in others. I fear things are going to get a lot shittier before they get any better — in our parks, in our politics, and just generally on our planet. Here's hoping humanity manages to exceed my expectations.

I'm dating someone 13 years younger than me. He's a monogamous man and I am not a monogamous woman. We've been monogamous due to the pandemic, but with the explicit understanding that we won't work out in the long term due to our different opinions on monogamy. I will be vaccinated soon, but I don't want to break up with him after I get the hots for someone else. That seems like a dick move. My lizard brain tells me that if he would explore non-monogamy he'd come to the conclusion that it's a good approach. Should I put on my big girl pants and break it off? — Rip Off The Bandage Albeit Nicely

You don't have to end it after finding someone else you wanna fuck — or before — but you will need to give this guy a heads up before you fuck someone else. And who knows? He may be willing to give non-monogamy a try once the pandemic ends (perhaps one-sided non-mo-nogamy, e.g. you're free to sleep with other people and he's free to remain monogamous to you), ROTBAN, just as you were willing to give monogamy a try while the pandemic raged. He's significantly younger, but I assume he's an adult (he is an adult, right?) and, as an adult, he's free to make his own choices. Your only obligation is to ensure he has all the information he needs to make a fully informed choice.

Bi-girl, early 30s, in an open relationship with a man. A question of ethics. Say I'm on the apps looking to hook-up with women. I'm upfront that I'm in an open relationship and looking for casual fun. I have no intention of trying to leverage these dates into threesomes with me and my boyfriend. But it turns my boyfriend on to hear about the fun I have with other people. Would it be wrong to let my boyfriend come sit, anony-mously, in a bar where I'm meeting a date? I'll ignore him, he won't stare or approach me and my date, he'll just get a thrill out of being there. On the one hand, I assume most women wouldn't be into this scenario. So that's a reason not to do it. But on the other hand, they wouldn't know. I realize this depends on actually executing the plan with discretion, but that seems doable. Thoughts?

— Seeking Perspectives In Ethical Dating

This passes my Permissible Secret Perving test (which I unpack at length in an upcoming book) — it passes the PSP test so long as the other woman doesn't know your boyfriend is there and never finds out your boyfriend was there — but it fails the Golden Rule test. Meaning, this probably isn't something you would want others doing unto you and therefore isn't something you should do unto others. So, Jesus thinks you shouldn't do this, SPIED, and I think... well, I don't think you should. That's too strong a word. But I definitely think you could.

Do you know what's in commercial sex lubes? Chemicals, And chemicals are bad and unnatural. Seriously. I prefer olive oil or something else from the kitchen. But whenever I use cooking oils, I find that a tiny layer of dead cells sloughs off my cock. That isn't a problem, but the cells seem to gather together and it feels like grains of sand. I'm assuming certain oils loosen dead skin cells and it causes this. Are there some oils that don't do that?

- Stroking Not Sanding

We use commercial sex lube at our place, SNS, and our cocks aren't shedding dead skin cells at noticeable/clumpable rates or making our asses feel like they're packed with sand. And we do know what's in our lube: our preferred brand, Spunk, is made from avocado and coconut oils and these ingredients, according to Spunk's website, "are organic and chem-ical-free." Now if you Google, say, "chemical composition of avocado oil," you learn that it, like everything else — including your precious olive oil — is composed of various chemicals. Natural, not man-made, but chemicals still. That said, SNS, if the oils you're using as lube are causing your dick to disintegrate then you might wanna give Spunk a chance
